

MIGRANT CLINICIANS NETWORK

MCN 2020 IN REVIEW

Over the last 36 years, Migrant Clinicians Network has addressed the social determinants of health among underserved communities like migrants, immigrants, refugees, and food and farmworker communities. Across the US and Puerto Rico, we have engaged in community-based, participatory outreach; provided technical assistance and training to frontline clinicians; and engaged directly with migrant and refugee patients through virtual case management. The pandemic has made long-standing underlying health inequities into front page news, as “essential” workers hit barrier after barrier to stay safe and get care when needed. Much of MCN’s work in 2020 pivoted toward protecting these populations from COVID-19 and reducing health inequities that the virus has amplified.

Supporting Health Care Workers on the Frontline

The clinicians we serve provide safety-net primary care to the most vulnerable. Here are a few of the ways MCN supported health care workers in 2020:

Faced with a global pandemic, clinicians and those they help are suffering with anxiety and depression. MCN’s Witness to Witness Program provides evidence-based remedies for this suffering. Over the last year, we completed a series of peer support groups for workers, supervisors, and attorneys working in health care.

MCN also launched the annual Kugel and Zuroweste Health Justice Award to recognize clinicians contributing to the field of health justice. The first awardee, Caroline Johnson, FNP, played a crucial role in helping state leaders manage the threat of COVID-19 among farmworkers in Iowa.

When clinicians needed resources on transmission, contact tracing, health misinformation, vaccination and more, we pivoted to provide virtual trainings on the latest practices and panels for conversations with experts in the field. To make MCN resources more accessible, we formed new partnerships to translate and distribute COVID-19 related materials across the country.

Feedback we’ve received from clinicians:

“MCN has been a wonderful resource over the years in understanding farmworkers’ health and the social determinants of health.”

“This is a great nonprofit that has really stepped up during the COVID-19 pandemic to make sure accurate and timely information is available.”

“As a nurse, MCN continues to blow me away. Between their outstanding trainings and workshops, they are an excellent resource.”
